Call For Submissions

Graduate Student Prize

The graduate student prize is awarded each year for the best astronomy research paper submitted to the Prize committee by a graduate student enrolled at a member institution, and completed during the past year.

Submitted materials are quite often derived from the dissertation of the student, but they can be from any original research. In the case of work done in collaboration with a faculty member, that faculty member should write a letter to the committee in which their participation and that of the student are clearly detailed. The Prize winner receives a check for $500 when the Prize lecture is delivered at a meeting of the Astronomical Society of New York.

Undergraduate Student Prize

The undergraduate student prize is awarded each year for the best astronomy research paper submitted to the Prize committee by an undergraduate student enrolled at a member institution, and completed during the past year. Submitted materials can be from any original research done by the student. In the case of work done in collaboration with a faculty member, that faculty member should write a letter to the committee in which their participation and that of the student are clearly detailed. The Prize winner receives a check for $500 when the Prize lecture is delivered at a meeting of the Astronomical Society of New York.

Please send electronic copies of submission materials via email to:
